

THE SILLY GOOSE

He didn't know about Bond Street...

The Blend that Meets the INDOOR TEST

Smokers told him about BOND STREET's rich, mellow flavor—bite-free as a custom blend.

Men—and ladies, too—told him it leaves no stale gray spots in the room... and that—

BOND STREET contains a taste aromatic tobacco never before used in any popular blend. Truly aromatic. Never loses its flavor.

But—he wouldn't believe.

Some day he will discover BOND STREET. When he does—man!—you'll never pay him back.

Make this discovery yourself—today!

"The Ox-Bow Incident" (continued)

A farewell letter to his wife is written by Martin, whose ownership of the cattle of the ranch had been without a bill of sale since the thirties of his youth.

The lynching takes place at daybreak. Martin notes that someone took after his wife and babies. When he again protests his innocence he is struck by the deputy sheriff.

The letter is read to Gil Carter in the bar of Dudley's saloon to the abandoned owners of the cattle after its return from the ranch. With Carter is his buddy, Art Croft.
